ABSTRACT

Based upon data collected annually by the American Association of Junior Colleges (AAJC), this directory provides information on 1,111 community, junior, and technical colleges and two-year branch campuses in the United States and its territories, including 1970 and 1971 data on enrollments and personnel. Following introductory material on the scope of the directory, projections are presented for total enrollments and numbers of colleges for 1972 to 1981. Next, the directory lists colleges alphabetically by state or country and provides the following information for each: location; chief administrative head; telephone number; year classes began; type of control or affiliation; AAJC membership; state recognition or accrediting agency; types of programs (i.e., transfer and/or occupational); co-educational or single-sex status of school; October 1970 enrollments broken down for full- and part-time freshman, sophomore, and unclassified students; total October 1970 enrollment; enrollment in summer session 1971; October 1971 enrollment; full- and part-time faculty and administrators in 1971-72; tuition or all-inclusive fee; and type of academic calendar. Next, tables provide statewide enrollment and personnel summaries for all institutions and for public and independent colleges and show the distribution of two-year colleges by size. Lists of changes in institutions since the previous year, community and junior college organizations, and state administrators for two-year college education conclude the directory. (AYC)

Alphabetical Listing of Junior Colleges 104

INTRODUCTION

This is the 1972 Junior College Directory. It contains, we believe, information that will be most useful to those interested in America's community and junior colleges, technical institutes, and branch campuses of major colleges and universities. It reflects continued expansion, in terms of numbers of institutions and increased enrollments, in this sector of the country's educational system.

As with previous directories produced by the Association, this publication is focused chiefly on enrollments in the two-year institutions. We have included an analysis of figures contained in the book, however, as well as listings of state directors of community and junior college education and state and regional organizations of two-year college representatives.

This publication is not an AAJC membership directory per se. The report, in addition to listing member colleges, also includes names and data for a number of institutions that are not members. To make the listing as comprehensive as possible, the editors have made an effort to include all non-profit institutions that are organized on a two-year basis, have state recognition and/or regional accreditation, and offer two-year associate degree programs.

More detailed information on individual two-year colleges may be found in the eighth edition of American Junior Colleges, published by the American Council on Education. The Association in general follows the criteria established for American Junior Colleges in determining the institutions to be included in the annual Directory. It should be noted that the Directory does not include information on proprietary colleges.

The editors rely heavily on the reporting colleges for accuracy of data. We are most grateful to the institutions for their support and cooperation in this project.

A Look at the Future

By Aikin Connor

The Data

Opening fall enrollment figures for American two-year colleges are gathered each year by the American Association of Junior Colleges and reported in the annual Junior College Directory. These figures are provided by the individual institutions in accordance (hopefully) with definitions provided them by AAJC. Errors in the data may result from misunderstanding the definitions, from issuing estimates rather than reporting actual enrollment, or from record-keeping procedures which are not consonant with the specific annual request for enrollment data. Of course, there may also be undetected clerical errors, such as transposition of figures.

Some of these errors may be spotted by the editor and corrections requested, but, undoubtedly, errors of varying magnitude are reported in each year's compilation of enrollment figures. However, the Junior College Directory, over the years, has been a reasonably accurate report of enrollment in two-year colleges – within the constraints of the definitions employed. In the ensuing discussion of enrollment projections for American two-year colleges, the assumption is made that the data are reasonably accurate and that such errors as may exist are randomly distributed.

The Procedures

Projection techniques as procedures for predicting the future assume that the future is essentially a function of the past.[1] Other assumptions are made which may be specific to a particular factor or variable, such as the assumption that the population growth rate will continue, or change in a specified manner. In general, unless a variable is specifically singled out for consideration, the tacit assumption is that it will have no effect on the future being predicted.

[1]A critical discussion of projection procedures and other forecasting methods may be found in Community College Enrollment Projections, by Aikin Connor. Washington, D.C.: The American Association of Junior Colleges, 1971.

In the projections that follow, the factors or variables considered are: 1) number of public two-year colleges, 2) number of independent two-year colleges, 3) total opening fall enrollment in all two-year colleges, 4) opening fall enrollment in all public two-year colleges, and 5) opening fall enrollment in all independent two-year colleges. Specific assumptions are indicated for individual projections.

Because many contributing factors are not considered in the following projections (such as population growth, ratio of "college-age" to total population, etc.) these projections should be considered as approximations, subject to errors not only because of inaccurate or incomplete data, but because of possibly invalid assumptions, specific or implied.

Two procedures were used to develop the projections which follow. Projection A, in each case, was developed by exponential smoothing of historical data (enrollment and number of colleges) to achieve the optimum weighting of the factors of trend, irregularity, and recent demand. This optimum weighting varies from case to case and was achieved by tentatively forecasting each year's enrollment or number of colleges as though they were in the future. Comparison with the actual data, year by year, was then made and the combination of weighting of factors which would have produced the fewest overall errors was adopted. This system of weighting trend, irregularity, and recent demand was then used to project specific enrollments and numbers of colleges over the next ten-year period.

The second procedure used for projections involved regression analyses to determine historical relationships among the variables to be predicted. For each of the predicted variables a regression equation was then used to modify the projection for that variable developed by the procedure described above as Projection A. The modified projection is reported as Projection B.

Technical reports of each of the projections following will be made available on request to the author.

The Projections

Total Enrollment Projections

Projections of total two-year college opening fall enrollment were made in the two ways described above. Projection A is based only on total enrollments over the past 15 years. Projection B takes into account the effect of public colleges on total enrollment. A third projection was made by summing the projections of independent college enrollment and public college enrollment. However, the result was so very nearly identical with Projection B, it is not reported.

Total Opening Fall Enrollment, 1971 = 2,680,762

In a special report by the Carnegie Commission[2] enrollment projections were made from different assumptions and different data. For 1975 these projections were 3,560,000 and 3,110,000 – each from different assumptions.

Another projection of enrollment based on still another set of assumptions predicts an enrollment of 4,500,000 students by 1980.[3]

Number of Public Colleges Projected

Two projections for the number of public two-year colleges were made. Projection A is based only on the number of public colleges reporting in each of the past 15 years. Projection B addresses the question, "How many public colleges would there be if public college enrollment increases as projected?"

Number of Public Colleges reporting in 1971 = 872

Number of Independent Colleges Projected

Two projections were made for independent colleges. Projection A is made on the basis of the past 15 years. Projection B is concerned with the question, "How many independent colleges will there be if enrollment increases as projected?"

Projected Enrollment in Public Colleges

To predict the number of students who will enroll in public two-year colleges over the next ten years, two projections were made. Projection A was developed from enrollment figures in public colleges over the past 15 years. Projection B seeks to answer the question, "What if the number of colleges increases as projected?"

*All numbers are rounded to the nearest thousand.

Opening fall enrollment reported by public colleges in 1971 = 2,543,901

Projected Enrollment in Independent Colleges

Two projections of enrollment in independent two-year colleges were made. Projection A is based only on the enrollment in independent colleges over the past 15 years. Because it was found that enrollment in independent colleges seems to be related to enrollment in public colleges, Projection B was developed to answer the question, "What will enrollments be in two-year independent colleges if public college enrollment increases as projected?"

*All numbers are rounded to the nearest thousand.

Opening fall enrollment in independent colleges for 1971 = 136,861.

Summary and Interpretation

Even with the considerations of data inaccuracies and projection inadequacies, several points emerge convincingly. First, unless the past rate of new colleges being built is stepped up, many potential students – 600,000 by 1976, and one million by 1981 – may not be enrolling in public community colleges. According to the projections, by 1976, 351 additional public colleges will be required if projected student demand is to be met, whereas only 199 colleges are predicted. By 1981, 674 additional colleges will be needed, with only 396 being forecast.

Second, the two-year college movement is not confined to public colleges, but is reflected also in projected enrollments in independent colleges. In fact, it would seem that if the public enrollment increases as anticipated, independent college enrollment will increase accordingly. Although the projections indicate the number of independent colleges may stabilize at around the current level, their enrollments will increase.

A final note is appropriate here. Many people will view the foregoing projections with skepticism. They know the American community and junior college movement has a way of making the future.
